1. [REDACTED] there was animosity between some Chinese Communist and North Korean army officers because the Chinese Communists refused to transfer North Korean recruits to the North Korean Army according to a previous agreement.¹
2. There is a Chinese Communist intelligence net operating in Chongju and Kaech'on (125-54, 39-42) (YD-4998) under cover of the Chinese Communist Rear Supply Office.² About six Chinese Communist officers using civilian cover were attached to each supply office. These officers were using many non-Communist North Korean informants who are in contact with local Chinese residents. Many members of North Korean political and social organizations have been instructed by high North Korean officials to give misleading information to the Chinese Communist intelligence representatives.
